State Journal-Register building up for auction

Questions linger about the future of Springfield's daily paper

MEDIA | Scott Reeder

The State Journal-Register building will be auctioned this month, raising questions about the future of Springfield's daily newspaper.

"I remember moving into that building in the 1980s – it had so much room," said retired columnist Toby McDaniel. "I can't blame them for wanting to sell it now. Their staff is so small that they don't need a building that big, and they have to pay taxes on it and try to maintain it."

As advertising dollars have shifted from newspapers to the internet during the last decade, publishers nationwide have taken a near formulaic approach: move printing, copy editing and circulation functions to centralized hubs and cut staff.

And the final move often is to sell their building.

Today, the SJ-R is printed in Peoria, its circulation call center is in Arizona and copy editors design its pages in Texas, or in their homes scattered across the country. The news staff has atrophied from about 60 people to just nine full-time employees, said Ryan Mahan, who leads the newsroom's union.

But it's not just the size of the staff that has dropped. In 2007, the SJ-R claimed a print weekday circulation of 50,212. Today, according to the Illinois Press Association, it is 12,932.

SJ-R editor Leisa Richardson has said once the building sells, the staff will relocate elsewhere in Springfield. The online auction is slated to begin Sept. 13 and close Sept. 15.

"Newspapers once would build big buildings in downtowns as a statement that they were important and that they were prominent in the community. Now, papers across the country are selling their downtown buildings because they need the cash. They don't want to send this message, but the reality is they are saying: 'We're no longer important. We're no longer prominent in this community,'" said John Newby, a national newspaper consultant who has been a publisher in Illinois, Indiana and Oklahoma.

Former State Journal-Register publisher Pat Coburn agreed.

"This is what happens when you have money people, not news people, running things," he said. "Hedge funds and investors are buying up newspapers all across the country. To me, that building is symbolic. It is emblematic of the role of newspapers. It is right across the street from government. The role of a newspaper is to keep an eye on government."

The building, located at 1 Copley Plaza near the intersection of Ninth Street and Capitol Avenue, is just south of the Sangamon County courthouse and east of Springfield's city hall.

Coburn, who started at the SJ-R as a police reporter and retired four decades later in 2006 as publisher, left shortly before California-based Copley Press sold its Illinois holdings, including the SJ-R, to New York-based GateHouse Media. GateHouse has since acquired Gannett and assumed its name.

The Sangamon County Assessor's office lists the fair market value of the building at $1,457,889. The building, which has been on the market for almost 10 years, has in the past been listed for prices ranging from $1.75 million to $2.9 million, according to the State Journal-Register.

Mahan said the newspaper only has four news reporters covering the entire community. By contrast, the SJ-R and Copley had five people covering just the Illinois Statehouse before the Gatehouse acquisition.

"The reporters at the State Journal-Register are working their butts off," McDaniel said. "I know two of them, and they are absolute workhorses."

But the smaller staff has resulted in fewer Springfield-area news stories being written.

McDaniel said fewer people are reading the newspaper because it has less local news. Coburn added that reader habits have changed as people seek more of their news from social media and other online sources.

Newby, the national newspaper consultant, said as advertising revenue has dropped, papers have tried to make up the shortfall by increasing subscription rates.

"Let's say you have 20,000 subscribers; you double your rates and 10,000 people cancel because they don't want to pay that much. Well, revenue-wise, you are coming out the same – even though you have lost half your subscribers."

Newby said such moves may help a newspaper's bottom line in the short term but they are hardly a strategy for long-term success.

Union president Mahan indicated there is little reason for optimism.

"Every time there's a cut, every time there's opportunity for layoffs, or whatever, you think, there's nothing more to cut," he said. "They can't get any less than this. And yet every time you feel that way, they find some other way to cut or not rehire. It's really depressing."

Editor Richardson said she could not say what Gannett will do with the proceeds of the building's sale.

"I'm not optimistic that they ever will really invest more money into staff or anything like that," Mahan said. "I can see someone from Gannett putting on an old coat that they haven't worn for 10 years and finding, you know, a billion dollars. But even then, I don't think they're going to add another staff member to our paper." □

Editor's note

We have two new staff writers reporting for Illinois Times. Scott Reeder and Kenneth Lowe have been contributing articles occasionally; now their work will appear weekly in these pages. Reeder, a resident of Sherman, is a veteran Statehouse reporter, having worked for several news organizations, including the Small Newspaper Group and Illinois News Network. His weekly opinion column, which appears regularly in many Illinois newspapers, becomes a regular feature of the expanded IT opinion section. Kenneth Lowe of Springfield, who has been a reporter for the Decatur Herald and Review and Bloomington Pantagraph, has spent recent years employed in communications and media relations, first for Lieutenant Gov. Sheila Simon, then for the office of the Illinois Senate President. We urge our readers to take note of these new bylines, and to engage with the journalists behind them.

We note the passing of Adlai Stevenson, who dropped the Ill after he'd earned the name. As state representative, Illinois treasurer, U.S. senator for 10 years and two-time candidate for governor, Stevenson represented the best traditions of Illinois politics and ethics. His crafted speeches filled the 1970s with possibilities. His kindness and friendship inspired this reporter. – Fletcher Farrar, editor

The imaginary, languishing lake

Plans for a recreational Hunter Lake face scrutiny

DEVELOPMENT | Kenneth Lowe

The more than 40-year saga of the proposed “Hunter Lake” continues, with the city of Springfield now arguing for the lake to be used not just as a supplemental water source, but as a means of more lakeside recreation. As it has since the project began long ago, the proposal also faces criticism from detractors.

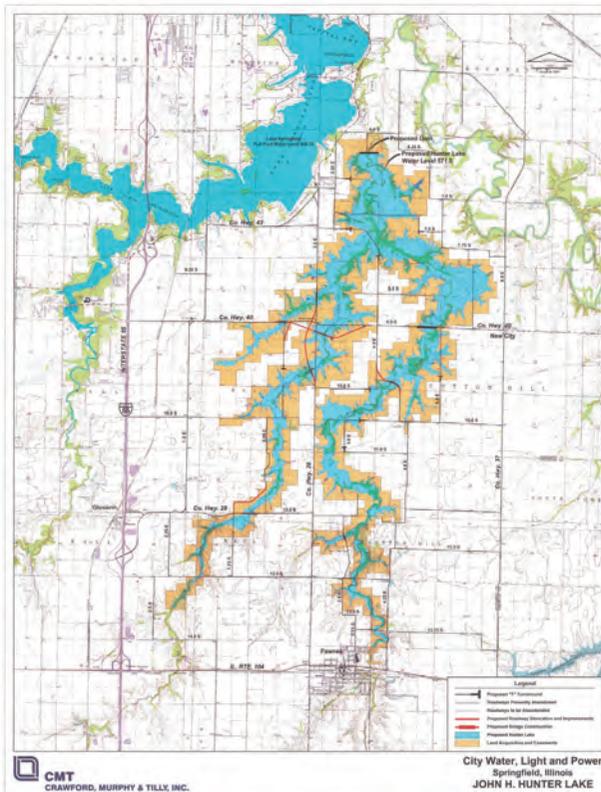

Springfield has planned, studied and debated the creation of the proposed 3,000-acre lake since long before it applied for a 1989 permit with the federal Army Corps of Engineers, which kicked off decades of environmental studies, public comment periods and more studies.

At issue is whether the Corps of Engineers will approve a permit for the lake to be created, a determination made after a cost-to-benefit analysis is made. The first official mention of the lake’s use for recreation came nearly 30 years after that first application, when the city – in late 2018 – asked the Army Corps of Engineers to add recreation to the goals of the project. This, in turn, has necessitated an additional study to determine the proposed lake’s suitability for recreation. In February 2020 the city council approved funding for the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign to perform the study.

The addition of recreation as a goal of the lake project also opened another period of public comment in late July this year. Prairie Rivers Network (PRN), a Champaign-based environmental group, recently provided public comments to the Corps of Engineers detailing several concerns it has with the validity of data being used to support the creation of the lake.

“Our main concern at this point is that, despite the best efforts of [Army Corps of Engineers] and its third-party contractor, many results and conclusions from those source documents ... are being incorporated into the [environmental impact statement] without sufficient scrutiny,” PRN wrote in a July 30 email to the Corps’ regulatory division.

PRN pointed out, among other concerns, that a number of studies used in the initial environmental impact study date from the 1990s, contain errors, or may otherwise be biased in favor of Hunter Lake and against alternatives to its creation. Don Hanrahan, a Springfield lawyer with Citizens for Sensible Water Use, a longtime opponent to the creation of the lake, also submitted public comment to the Army Corps of Engineers in late July that, among other things, called into question the usefulness of Hunter Lake as a means of providing any meaningful recreational lake space that the area currently lacks.

Hanrahan’s comment to the Corps cited a city survey of people who use or want to use the lake for recreational purposes, which Hanrahan said fails to make the case for another lake. More than 60% of the U of I study’s respondents indicated they were “satisfied” or “very satisfied” with available aquatic recreation options, and the most common response to questions about what factors prevent people from engaging in water recreation activities was not having enough time.

“The study does not show that a third lake within 15 miles of two existing lakes would affect the majority of the survey respondents whose needs cannot be met except by increasing their interest, improving their health, increasing their available time, or providing equipment they lack,” his email read. Springfield Mayor Jim Langfelder argued the study shows that the Springfield area would benefit from the addition of the recreation provided by Hunter Lake, and that adding it would also preserve the viability of Lake Springfield.

Opponents have also renewed their arguments calling into question as well the lake’s necessity as a water supplement. Don Davis, another longtime opponent, argued in his comments to the Corps of Engineers that the planned closure of three of CWLP’s coal-fired power plants would reduce water use by about 10.9 million gallons per day. Hunter Lake’s creation would provide about 12 million gallons per day.

“Reducing leakage in the distribution system, enacting a water conservation rate structure and dredging the phosphorus-laden sediment out of Lake Springfield to comply with EPA water quality standards in total would certainly make up for a 1.1 million gallon per day deficit,” Davis wrote.

Langfelder said increasing the city’s water supply is important in light of requests smaller municipalities have made of the city’s water infrastructure, and also to prepare for the future.

“The resource of the future is going to be water. When you look at economic development, or sustainability or resiliency, water is going to be the driving factor,” Langfelder said.

Having provided the recreational study, Langfelder said the city awaits further direction from the Army Corps of Engineers on the project. □

Students who study abroad have life-changing experiences. So do those who host a student from another country.

Area high school students can apply to study abroad during the 2022-2023 school year through the Rotary Youth Exchange Program. More than 40 countries participate. Students must be between 16 and 18 ½ years of age when they leave.

Although some students fear they will miss something by leaving for a year, students who participate routinely have more advantages. They mature beyond their peers by immersing themselves in another culture. Many receive college scholarships. Students say the experience differentiates them when applying for college, graduate school, internships and jobs.

Zane Phillips, from Perry in Pike County, studied in Brazil in 2020. “I was part of an elite group of ambassadors who went overseas and shared our way of life,” said Phillips. “It was and is to date the most accomplished journey I have ever been on. It set me up for entering college by allowing me to grow as an adult.”

While “outbound” students study abroad, “inbound” students from other countries are hosted here. Hosts are needed for the 2022-2023 school year. Although many host families have children at home, that is not required. Hosting foreign exchange students creates relationships that last a lifetime and exposes the entire family to different cultures and a broader worldview.

For more information, go to www.csrye.org or email barbmalany@yahoo.com. The application process for students is lengthy, so inquire now in order to meet the Dec. 1 application deadline. □

Grants provide relief to those who may have been left out

BUSINESS | Maria Gardner

Drive downtown in Springfield and you will see the impact of the pandemic. Shuttered restaurants and stores, unkempt sidewalks and scant foot traffic all point to a city struggling to bounce back from years of a struggling economy as well as COVID-19. A new statewide pandemic relief program seeks to reach small businesses that were not always prioritized in previous grant cycles.

“Ensuring that small businesses are active and thriving is super important as far as the economic landscape in Springfield,” said Dominic Watson, president of the Springfield Black Chamber of Commerce.

The Illinois Department of Commerce and Economic Opportunity (IDCEO) launched the “Back 2 Business” grant program Aug. 18. It provides grants to small businesses that have experienced economic losses because of the pandemic. With a $250 million pot of money in all, the state will award grants in increments of $5,000 to $150,000 per business, or up to $250,000 for a hotel. The funds can be used for operational expenses including staffing and overhead. Grants will be awarded on a rolling basis.

Tracey Smith, director of community health at Illinois Public Health Association (IPHA), said grants will not be awarded on a first-come, first-served basis. Rather, applicants will be ranked on whether they fall under certain categories.

Businesses given priority include those that have not previously received federal or state recovery money, that made less than $5 million in revenue in 2019, that are located in hard-hit areas and those in hard-hit sectors, such as the food industry. Dry-cleaning service, arts and entertainment are other examples of sectors considered hard hit.

To reach, educate and support business owners applying for the grant, the state awarded funds through the Community Navigator program, which partners with community organizations for outreach, education and to provide one-on-one technical and logistical support for applicants.

“There is a level of disconnect and a level of distrust as it relates to small businesses and government and that’s why this program is so important, because we are trusted in our community,” said Watson, who is partnered with the Community Navigator program.

to on-the-ground efforts to reach small business owners who fit the program’s priorities.

Previous programs such as the federal Paycheck Protection Program and the state’s Business Interruption Grant (BIG) helped some businesses survive. But many applicants were not granted assistance. IDCEO awarded more than $275 million dollars in grants through BIG, according to IDCEO’s website. On Jan. 29, Capitol News Illinois reported that the grant program awarded 8,974 recipients, which was only about 20% of applicants.

While the demand for support was far greater than available funds, the BIG program application process also had flaws that left many from successfully completing the application. Criticisms of BIG included that it did not provide clear guidelines on paperwork requirements and a lack of feedback if an application was incomplete.

Alyson Grady, central regional manager for IDCEO said at a Sept. 1 press conference in Springfield that this new program, Back 2 Business, aims to address some of BIG’s issues and to reach businesses most in need. The new program streamlines the documentation requirements and has an online feature letting applicants see the status of their applications.

Details needed to file an application for the Back 2 Business grant include identification records of the business owner, a bank statement and tax returns. Applicants are encouraged to apply early since money is expected to run out before the Oct. 13 application deadline.

Businesses owners who want help with applications or who have questions about the program can visit Lincoln Library in Springfield, 326 S. 7th St., on the following dates:

- Sept. 13, 10 a.m.-12 p.m. and 5 p.m.-7 p.m.

Dick Allen began his 15-season Major League Baseball career in 1963, playing for the Philadelphia Phillies. He was an All-Star in seven seasons and is ranked among baseball's top offensive producers of the 1960s and early 1970s, but has never been inducted into the National Baseball Hall of Fame.

INDUCT DICK ALLEN

As a congenital Philadelphian, I recognized immediately the pictured-from-behind subject of this week's cover story as that of the late Dick Allen, wearing his #15 Phillies jejune road uniform of the 1960s ("A league of their own," Sept. 2). Allen passed away in 2020, at age 78. The Phillies this year wear a commemorative #15 on their sleeves.

As a point of correction to Mike Pittman's excellent article on the Negro baseball leagues, the implication from the caption under the same photo appearing in the body of the article is that Dick Allen actually played in the Negro Leagues, but he never did so. Allen's entire minor league career between 1960 and 1963 was with the Phillies minor league affiliates.

Allen was an unforgettable ballplayer. Quixotic and aloof, he was a Paul Bunyan-like figure crammed into a statuesque ebony-colored frame of modest dimensions. But, trust me, he was beyond dynamite. As a youngster obsessed with baseball and my hometown Phillies, I saw Allen countless times during his first stint with the Phillies between 1963 and 1969. Several of my fondest memories include those of his running gait that mimicked the speeding wheels of a steam locomotive, his use of a 40-ounce bat that is the baseball equivalent of swinging an anvil and two of his gargantuan home runs that I witnessed in person at the old Connie Mack Stadium – a stadium which, like many stadiums of its era, had cavernous dimensions that favored pitchers (such as Springfield's Robin Roberts) over hitters.

One of the homers came after Allen had to hit the deck to avoid a nasty brush-back pitch thrown at his head. He picked himself up, glared at the pitcher, re-entered the batter's box and promptly launched the next pitch as a moonshot that cleared the 60-foot roof over the left field stands – one of Allen's many career home runs that traveled over 500 feet.

The other home run was of a different character. Connie Mack's center field fence was 447 feet from home plate, a prodigious distance not uncommon in those days, but almost never seen at today's major league center field fences. One night, Allen connected and smashed a line drive that never rose above 20 feet high but somehow carried over the 447 sign, to the astonishment of the center fielder and to everyone else in the world of baseball.

Allen's 15-year career, with its ups and downs, has been well-chronicled elsewhere. There is controversy about whether or not he belongs in the National Baseball Hall of Fame in Cooperstown, New York. We Philadelphians sure think he does.

BOOSTER SHOTS NOW

I called the Department of Public Health COVID hotline and asked if they were keeping a list of people who wanted to get the booster shot. The response was, "No, we started a list, but it became too much trouble." My wife's sister and her friends live by the Indiana border and they went to Indiana and got their booster shot weeks ago.

When Illinois finally rolls out the booster program, it will be inundated with calls and overwhelmed. I do not want to have to spend days waiting on the phone when a motivated person on a waiting list could be contacted by the office, scheduled and then vaccinated.

The record shows half our populace will not get a shot under any circumstances, so we might as well move on to the booster program. The politicians will be first in line and given preference to get the shot.

Still no deal on an energy bill

POLITICS | Rich Miller

While a huge cloud of coal ash exploded around Springfield's coal-fired electric power plant late in the afternoon, the state's top three Democrats were huddled in a Statehouse conference room trying to find a way to slash electric power plant carbon emissions to zero by 2045.

The irony was both unmistakable and irresistible.

The giant ash plume, caused by an equipment failure, finally dissipated hours later. But by then it was also clear that any attempt to pass a climate/energy bill by the end of the day was doomed – and that was a human failure.

The Senate Democrats have controlled the negotiations on the climate/energy bill for more than two years, but Gov. JB Pritzker's office has obviously wanted to take control of the process from the very start. They just think they know better, on this and many other topics.

That conflict has led to untold sniping, which is not surprising because Gov. Pritzker and Senate President Don Harmon have battled since even before Pritzker backed a candidate against Harmon in the Senate President's race in early 2020.

Gov. Pritzker walked away from the energy talks at the end of this past spring session when Harmon wouldn't agree to close the state's two municipally owned coal-fired electric power plants in Springfield and the Metro East by 2035. Pritzker again walked away in mid-June when Harmon tried to piggyback onto the week's session agenda of correcting the House appropriations bill's many fatal mistakes with a bill to fix the climate/energy bill. But Harmon ultimately couldn't unite unions and environmentalists on the new legislation, even though Pritzker agreed by then to extend the coal plant closure dates to 2045.

And then history repeated itself last week when the General Assembly's focus was supposed to be on the legislative remap do-over. Harmon couldn't close the climate/energy deal talks amidst numerous large and small objections from the governor and the greens. Blame Harmon, blame Pritzker, blame whomever. The talks failed.

Three strikes, you're out, etc., so now the ball is in Pritzker's court. Harmon finally surrendered control and punted a climate/energy bill to the House, where Speaker Chris Welch has warned both Pritzker and Harmon that he isn't moving a bill unless all three agree to it.

Harmon's game plan has obviously been to appease trade unions in order to fund his redistricting-year campaigns in 2022. Speaker Welch has never expected to receive the same level of support from the white-dominated trades that flooded the kitty of his predecessor Michael Madigan, so he appears to be aligning himself with our billionaire governor to help fund the 2022 season.

But, in reality, maybe it was time to hand all this over to fresh eyes, because what the Senate was doing just didn't move the ball forward enough.

The proceedings last week often devolved into petty one-upmanship.

The week's initial Senate Democratic proposal imposed such strict limitations on carbon emissions by the municipally owned electric power plants like Springfield's CWLP and the Metro East's gigantic Prairie State Energy Campus that there was no likely way either plant could survive until 2045, even though no closure date was inserted into the legislation. But the governor had demanded a "date certain" closure for both plants, so the Senate Dems drastically revised their bill to allow the plants to pump out 100 percent of the carbon they are currently spewing all the way through to 2045, and then only then would they have to stop. No way would that be acceptable. It was an almost juvenile response

The governor's office countered with a combination of proposals: Scale down the coal plants' carbon emissions over the years and then shut everything down in 2045. The proposal was rejected out of hand.

Senate President Harmon told reporters that he believed it was too uneconomical for the companies to both reduce their carbon footprint and stop production before they'd finished paying for their pollution-reduction efforts. The governor's office believes the plants qualify for federal tax credits to subsidize the step-down, and they want time to convince Prairie State to take the money and the deal. Word is that an offer has been made directly to the electricity provider.

Unless attitudes change, the whole thing might just turn out to be too big for a state legislature to tackle. Harmon called the energy bill the most complicated piece of legislation he's dealt with in 21 years. He's probably right. □

CRT: Critical of race teaching

WEEKLY REEDER | Scott Reeder

Willie Moore was a Black man who endured segregation and saw the school where he taught integrated after a long fight for racial equality.

He loved teaching history but there was one topic he avoided: The civil rights movement.

“It was just too controversial to talk about. The students came from families that had different opinions on it. So, I just avoided teaching about it,” he told me on a hot Mississippi day as his Brahman cows grazed nearby and we sat on his rickety porch shooting the breeze.

In 2018, I’d stopped at Moore’s farm to interview him for a book I’m writing.

But we spent most of the time sitting and talking about Southern history. He recalled when 14-year-old Emmett Till was murdered in 1955 in Money, Mississippi, for whistling at a white woman. In the 1970s, the small town where he lived had one Black police officer – who was only allowed to arrest other Black people. He discussed the marches and the strife of the 1960s, a time when Black and white people used separate restrooms, drinking fountains and schools.

In our hour-long chat, he told me more about race and Mississippi than he likely ever shared with his students. Even today, Confederate flags fly in front of plantation homes just down the road from where Moore resided.

On social media recently, I received a survey question from U.S. Rep. Rodney Davis, R-Taylorville, asking whether I thought “Critical Race Theory” should be taught in schools.

Supporters of teaching critical race theory contend race is a social construct, and that racism is not merely the product of individual bias or prejudice, but also something embedded in legal systems and policies. Conservative critics counter that the foundation of the theory is that the United States is fundamentally racist and that it leads students to feel guilty for past actions by white people.

Here is what I do know: Our schools have done a lousy job of teaching about race, discrimination and their role in history. And we need to do better.

I remember first learning about the Civil Rights Movement in 1971, when I was in the first grade. A local radio personality, Jimmy Carr, came and spoke about Martin Luther King on the leader’s birthday. Carr’s daughter, Jamie, was our only Black classmate in Caroline Broadhead’s class at Bateman Elementary School in Galesburg.

Mrs. Broadhead was an exceptional teacher. She recognized a need and found a local person to speak to it. King had been killed less than three years before and his death was a fresh scar on the nation’s conscience.

In the third grade, our teacher taught about King’s “I Have a Dream” speech and how segregation had once been a problem in the South. It was taught straight from the book. Never was it mentioned that racism was a problem in our own community.

The beaches at the city park, Lake Story, had been segregated until just a few years before. Whites used the beach on the north side and Blacks the one on the south side.

Some Galesburg restaurants turned Black diners away. Real estate agents often wouldn’t show people of color homes north of Main Street. And the local newspaper’s society page wouldn’t write about events south of Main Street.

The ornate Orpheum Theater had Black people sit in the balcony, apart from white folks.

But our teacher taught us that segregation was a Southern problem. Was she ignorant of segregation in our hometown? Or perhaps she thought it was a lesson too close to home. She would never receive a medal for courage in the classroom.

In a world of right and wrong, she chose a third route: compliance.

My first exposure to the concept of lynching was when our teacher told the Emmett Till story in our ninth grade civics class. The inflection of his voice and the smug manner in which he told of how Emmett was killed struck me as odd. In his rendition, the bad guys weren’t those who kidnapped and killed the 14-year-old child. It was Emmett himself.

For years, allegations of racism clung to our teacher, Ken Phlamm, like a cheap polyester suit on a hot day. The school district was either unwilling or unable to fire him despite calls for doing just that from the Galesburg Human Relations Commission and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

I used to think my hometown was unique in the way it avoided discussing its racism until I worked as a reporter in Galveston, Texas, in the 1980s. The faded letters of “Colored” could still be seen above some public doorways. But whenever I would ask older white people what the fight for integration was like, they would shrug and say it was “No big deal” and point to some distant community where things were “really bad.”

When I’d posed the same question to Black folks, the answer was always the same: “It was awful.”

Critics of Critical Race Theory often point to the 1619 Project, a Pulitzer Prize-winning endeavor by the New York Times Magazine looking at the legacy of 400 years of slavery on what is now the United States.

Some conclusions in the project I agreed with. Others I didn’t. But that’s OK. When you read something, it should provoke thought, not adherence.

Our youngsters deserve to be taught the facts and should be allowed to reach conclusions on their own. □

State Democrats trying to make their Big Tent much bigger

GUESTWORK | Sheila Stocks-Smith

Rich Miller's article in IT's Sept. 1 edition (Problems abound for Dems' new BLUE Committee) basically concludes that current efforts to build a strong and inclusive Democratic State Party won't matter much. This might be true if Democrats across the state were interested in maintaining the status quo of centralized, insular leadership and control. But they're not.

As a member of the State Central Committee of the Democratic Party of Illinois, I'm hearing optimism about the changes underway. In the area I represent – the 18th Congressional District – Democrats have felt forgotten and ignored by the party for decades. Yet they persisted. Our county parties, often in rural, Republican-dominated areas, have doggedly pursued party-building against great odds. Party loyalists, allied groups and individuals have persevered to uphold Democratic Party values and have been steadfast, despite little hope of electoral success.

Unlike Rich Miller's dismissive characterization, the Democrats in my district are energized by the new vision of diversity and inclusion being promoted by our new state party chair, Congresswoman Robin Kelly. And it's not just those in the 18th who are excited by the new direction of the Democratic Party of Illinois. State Party Chair Robin Kelly and a majority of State Central Committee members representing urban, suburban and rural districts are all embracing change and stepping up to make it happen.

Democrats have always had a "big-tent" philosophy but we know we can do better. We know that, at its best, the Democratic Party of Illinois (DPI) must tap into and empower all, equally, to maximize our potential. Democrats know that a strong Democratic Party of Illinois is the cornerstone for providing critical pathways for political participation and engagement of citizens. Robin Kelly embodies these principles in all her work and made them the centerpiece of her run for the position.

In fact, Chair Kelly's first official visit as DPI chair was to Springfield to stump for local candidates. She recently completed the first leg of her promised "listening tour," visiting Rock Island, Belleville, Collinsville, Edwardsville, Marion, Springfield, Champaign, Bloomington-Normal and Rockford. Weeks after her election, Chair Kelly commissioned eight ad hoc committees to explore ways to update our party structure and enhance our effectiveness. Under Kelly's leadership, DPI has hired a new executive director, Abby Witt, and is in the process of additional hiring to continue to build a team to support party-building across the state. We are elevating our use of data and other best practices, increasing our communication with State Central Committee members and creating regular opportunities to stimulate feedback.

The new BLUE committee (the subject of Rich's column) falls squarely in line with these values of inclusivity and activism. State party fundraising under this structure involves the participation of active Democrats across the state, allows DPI to expand our fundraising capacity to include other effective grassroots methods of raising funds and begins a new era of investment and accountability for Illinois Democrats. Our new bylaws also codify the ability for the party chair to create other standing committees chaired by members of the State Central Committee and, for the first time, expands the membership of those committees to include non-state central committee members so that DPI involves the expertise and experience of those doing crucial work around the state. All of this will involve thousands of grassroots Democrats working together to raise the resources and provide the infrastructure needed to support county parties and candidates from Metro East to Rockford and Chicago to Quincy.

I am respectfully asking all Democrats and anyone who supports our values to join with us to help build a strong, effective, diverse and inclusive Democratic Party of Illinois. We must resist the tendency to revert to the familiar and constantly ask ourselves if we have spread our net wide enough. There will be some growing pains as we transition toward this exciting future but, in the end, we will all work together to get the job done. That's what Democrats do. □

He stopped the death penalty, then went to prison himself

POLITICAL HISTORY | David Blanchette

George H. Ryan has faced some harsh critics during his 87 years of life, much of it spent in the public eye. But there was no tougher crowd than the roomful of murder victims' families that he invited to the Illinois Executive Mansion in 2002.

"They were bitter. They were terribly angry," Ryan said. "I stood at the podium and they threw stuff at me and raised hell with me."

Ryan, who was in the waning months of his one term as Illinois' 39th governor, was considering the fate of more than 100 prison inmates on the state's death row. He had been moved by the high-profile case of an innocent man who had spent 18 years awaiting execution in Illinois, and stood poised to make a monumental decision that would change the state's criminal justice landscape for generations.

Ironically, Ryan is most often remembered for his own troubles with the criminal justice system that ended with him serving five-and-a-half years in prison. He decided not to run for reelection in 2002, largely due to the highly publicized investigation that would ultimately result in his conviction. That left Ryan with a few precious months to accomplish what could form the legacy of his term in office.

"I wanted to do other things with my time in the governor's office, but I got waylaid with the death penalty," Ryan said.

That issue is the focus of Ryan's book Until I Could Be Sure: How I Stopped the Death Penalty in Illinois. The book was published in 2020, and Ryan held a private reception and book signing for friends and former colleagues recently in Springfield. He discussed the death penalty, his own time in prison and his life in retirement.

"How does that happen in America?"

"Before my time in office and as an officeholder I strongly supported the death penalty,” Ryan said. “It took some time for me to change my mind about keeping it in place.”

Ryan, a Republican, was faced with the prospect of an execution shortly after he took office in 1999. The governor’s role in an execution is to consider any final executive clemency requests that are filed on behalf of an inmate. Ryan did not grant clemency for Andrew Kororaleis, who was put to death on March 17 of that year.

“That guy was terrible. He and his gang used to drive down the streets of Chicago and pick up young women and mutilate them, rape them, kill them and throw them back in the street,” Ryan said. “All of my staff and everybody wanted me to go ahead and execute the guy and I said I really didn’t want to do it, but in the end I looked at it and he was guilty and did a lot of really bad things.”

“So we executed him. I did that and I’ll have to live with that for the rest of my life,” Ryan said. “But I thought I did the right thing at the time.”

That same year, Anthony Porter was exonerated after having spent 18 years on Illinois’ death row for a double murder. Ryan had granted Porter a stay of execution that gave Northwestern University journalism students time to hire a private investigator, who found the real killer. Porter’s release from prison received extensive media coverage.

“I was at the Executive Mansion watching the news and here comes this guy with a big grin on his face. He has just been released after being in jail for 18 years for killing those people,” Ryan said. “I said to (my wife) Lura Lynn, ‘How does that happen in America?’ How do they keep a guy in jail for 18 years on death row and then tell him he’s not guilty, you can go home now?”

The Porter case triggered Ryan’s interest, and a follow-up investigation by the Chicago Tribune about the state’s death penalty statute and its implementation made Ryan realize “how bad and corrupt and rotten the death penalty was and I agreed it didn’t work.”

Ryan personally reviewed the cases of more than 100 Illinois inmates on death row. He appointed a commission to examine and improve the state’s death penalty statute to a point that Illinois would not execute an innocent person, and that commission came back with 85 recommendations for legislation.

“Well, it was an election year and (Senate President) Pate Philip just buried the legislation altogether, because he was a solid guy with the death penalty,” Ryan said. “(House Speaker) Mike Madigan managed to pass just one piece of the recommendations, and that was that all people in death penalty cases had to have their confessions videotaped.”

“At that point I only had a few weeks left in office. I couldn’t get anything done, it was an election year, and nobody wanted to look like they were soft on crime,” Ryan said. “I could leave office and let the system go on and maybe three guys get executed who are innocent. Then I would have asked myself, ‘Why the hell didn’t I do something about it.’”

That’s when Ryan began to think there was only one safe way to prevent the execution of innocent people. He began discussing the possibility with his staff of commuting all death row inmates’ sentences.

“It was a very intense four-month period”

“There was division in the Governor’s Office,” said Dave Urbanek, press secretary and later director of communications for the Ryan administration. “There was political division, there was policy division, and there were a lot of Republicans who were like, ‘What are you doing? The death penalty is one of our staple issues.’”

“They said this isn’t what Republicans do. But George said, ‘Well, this is what decent people do,’” Urbanek said. “He actually did have his hand on the switch. And the way the system was set up it was unfair and it wasn’t working.”

Brad Cole was Ryan’s deputy chief of staff.

“The legislative leaders weren’t on board, most of the people of his own party weren’t on board. Eliminating or placing a moratorium on the death penalty was not exactly a Republican platform issue at the time,” Cole said. “There were and are friends that have probably let this issue or some other issue influence their opinion of George. But there are a lot of others that still have great admiration for him.”

Few people were busier than Mark Warnsing during the waning days of 2002. He was the administration’s deputy counsel for public safety and advised the governor about all of the facts and legal issues on each executive clemency case, which are normally handled one at a time. As Ryan’s term was ending, there was an avalanche of more than 100 clemency cases at once.

“A lot of the lawyers for these death row guys picked up on the fact that the governor may want to start considering these cases,” said Warnsing, who had assisted on death penalty cases during an earlier career as a prosecutor. “It was a very intense four-month period. Addressing everybody on death row at the same time was a monumental step and a rather daunting thing to even try to contemplate.”

Ryan ultimately decided to commute the death sentences of everybody on death row to life in prison, except for four individuals whose sentences were commuted to time served and were released.

“What I did with the death penalty put an X on me.”

Ryan’s death row decision came as federal prosecutors were building their case against him and 78 other state officials. The investigation began while Ryan was Illinois’ secretary of state. Six children were killed and their parents severely injured in a Wisconsin crash caused by an unqualified driver who had obtained his license through bribes made to Secretary of State officials. The investigation scope widened to include things that occurred while Ryan was governor.

Ryan was indicted in December 2003 on 22 counts, including racketeering, bribery, extortion, money laundering and tax fraud. He was defended pro bono by Winston and Strawn, the law firm managed by James R. Thompson, the former governor, with whom Ryan had served as lieutenant governor.

April 17, 2006, a jury found Ryan guilty on all counts. He was sentenced to six and a half years in prison. Ryan served five and a half, entering federal prison on Nov. 7, 2007. His wife of 55 years died in 2011 while Ryan was incarcerated.

“Here I am in prison and my wife died. It was terrible, I couldn’t do anything,” Ryan said. “They gave me an opportunity to go visit her but she was almost dead when I got to the hospital at midnight. Then they wouldn’t let me go to her funeral. I wasn’t doing anything in the prison, and I missed her burial.”

As tough as that situation was, Ryan said it was nothing compared to the plight of the inmates on Illinois’ death row during the last days of his administration.

“There’s no comparison. I was in a camp, there were no bars, the guards didn’t check to see if you were in bed at night,” Ryan said. “To compare it to death row, I couldn’t do that.”

The prison at Terre Haute where Ryan was incarcerated housed the federal death row, but Ryan said there were no executions while he was there.

Ryan still feels he got a “raw deal” with his conviction and imprisonment, and, “What I did with the death penalty put an X on me,” Ryan said. “Pretty much every prosecutor and police officer in the state were upset and told me how bad I was.”

But Ryan still has no regrets about his mass executive clemency actions.

“It was the right thing to do,” Ryan said. “I would do it again.”

Mike Murphy of Springfield served as press spokesman when Ryan was the lieutenant governor and during his first term as secretary of state. Murphy was one of many people who reconnected with Ryan during his recent Springfield book signing.

“George Ryan as I knew him was not hardhearted or a conservative for that matter, so I was not surprised that he did the right thing about the death penalty,” Murphy said. “Unfortunately he was going through some other things at the time that cast some ill light on his tenure, but I’ll never be able to thank him enough for his position on the death penalty.”

Ryan’s late 2002 actions eventually led to legislation that was signed on March 9, 2011, by Illinois Governor Pat Quinn to abolish the death penalty in Illinois. All 15 death row inmates in the state had their sentences commuted to life in prison without the possibility of parole.

Several years ago Ryan and Urbanek started drafting a book about Ryan’s career as a state representative, speaker of the Illinois House, lieutenant governor, secretary of state and governor.

“I called Scott Turow, he’s a friend of mine and has written a lot of good books,” Ryan said. “After he read what we put together, he said, ‘You don’t want to write this kind of book, you want to write a book on the death penalty. That’s the story you want to tell.’”

Ryan collaborated with former Chicago Tribune writer Maurice Possley, “who used to kick the hell out of me all of the time when I was governor,” and the book Until I Could Be Sure was the result.

Ryan still lives in his hometown of Kankakee but is frequently in Springfield visiting family. He has six children, 17 grandchildren and 14 great-grandchildren. Ryan is still acknowledged throughout Illinois.

“I walk down the street or I go to restaurants and people recognize me and come up and say hello,” Ryan said. “They are all very generous and kind. I haven’t had anybody really get after me.”

“Life has been good, my family is healthy, I have a lot of grandkids, and I’m now living an old man’s life,” Ryan said. “I have no conscience problems with what I did when I was in or out of office.” □

The Sioux Chef

Recovering Indigenous American cuisine

FOOD | Peter Glatz

I know quite a bit about the cuisines of Western Europe, the Mediterranean and Southeast Asia. I've studied the celebrated food culture of the American South (which was predominately the culinary influence of enslaved Africans). But I realize that I know next to nothing about the food culture of the Indigenous people who inhabited North America before European colonization.

Grade school history lessons instilled in me a sense of pride that this opulent country of ours provided refuge and opportunities for immigrants. I thought that the plaque on the pedestal of the Statue of Liberty – “Give me your tired, your poor, your huddled masses” – was our national credo. Wonderful ethnic food can be found in the Chinatowns, and Polish, German and Irish neighborhoods of our cities. But sadly, the cuisine of the people whose land we colonized has never been embraced. Where do you go to find Indigenous American cuisine? Nowhere. Aside from the Mitsitam Native Food Cafe in the National Museum of the American Indian in Washington, D.C., restaurants serving Indigenous cuisine just haven't existed.

Until recently.

Sean Sherman, aka the Sioux Chef, has been on a mission to change all that. Sean is an Oglala Lakota Sioux chef who was born in the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation in South Dakota. He didn't grow up eating foods made from Indigenous ingredients. He grew up eating the commodity foods – such as cereal, canned meats and shortening – that the government had been providing to the reservations since the 1930s. This program wasn't necessarily intended to be nutritious; it was created as a way of helping farmers by utilizing agricultural surplus. These were high glycemic foods: high in salt, sugars and bad fats, resulting in high incidences of type 2 diabetes, obesity, heart disease and a life expectancy 5 ½ years less than all other racial groups combined. It has been said that frybread, the calorie-rich deep-fried dough bread that is the mainstay of the reservation diet, has killed more Indians than the U.S. government. Obesity and tooth decay did not exist among the Indigenous people of North America until colonial ingredients were introduced.

Sean Sherman moved to Minneapolis in his early 20s and began working in restaurants. By age 29, he had risen to the level of an executive chef. But the long hours and intense pressure led to burnout so he took a year off and headed to Mexico. He ended up living in a remote jungle area among people who had been able to hold onto much of their pre-colonial food culture. “In an epiphany, I tasted how food weaves people together, connects families through generations, is a life force of identity and social culture.” This started him on a journey to discover his own food heritage.

Colonization and Western education erased so much of Indigenous knowledge. In the late 1800s, the U.S. government began placing Native American children in boarding schools, teaching them English and indoctrinating them in Christian beliefs. The boarding schools essentially wiped out all knowledge of their cultural heritage.

Sean began traveling to tribal communities around the country learning what he could about their food traditions. He learned about the native plants that were a source of food and medicine for his ancestors, and “reconnecting with the earth around us, getting to know the plants, not being lazy and calling everything a weed if you don't know what it is.” This exploration culminated in creation of The Indigenous Food Lab, his commissary and training center, dedicated to “reclaiming indigenous foodways and relearning generational knowledge.”

In an interview with National Geographic, Sean stated: “Why isn't the original indigenous diet all the rage today? It's hyperlocal, ultra-seasonal, uber-healthy: no processed foods, no sugar, no wheat (or gluten), no dairy, no high-cholesterol animal products. It's naturally low-glycemic, high-protein, low-salt, plant-based with lots of grains, seeds and nuts.”

Sean's message is gaining traction. His cookbook, The Sioux Chef's Indigenous Kitchen won a James Beard Foundation Book Award for Best American Cookbook. His newly opened restaurant, Owamni, which only serves food made from pre-colonial ingredients (no wheat flour, dairy, cane sugar, chicken, pork or beef) is the hardest reservation to score in Minneapolis.

At Owamni I enjoyed dishes that were modern preparations of Indigenous ingredients. Bison was featured prominently on the menu. At one time an estimated 60 million bison roamed the American countryside. Now the number is around 500,000. Bison meat is gaining in popularity because of its significant health benefits as compared to other meat sources. It has a low fat content which tends to give it a drier texture. Braising is a good way to achieve tenderness.

Hunter's Stew

Serves 4-6

Adapted from The Sioux Chef's Indigenous Kitchen by Sean Sherman and Beth Dooley

Ingredients

1 ounce dried wild mushrooms, such as chanterelles, trumpet or morels
1 cup boiling water
3 tablespoons sunflower oil
2 ½ to 3 pounds bison, cut into 1-inch to 2-inch cubes
Coarse salt
Crushed juniper (see notes below)
1 large leek, white part, trimmed
8 ounces fresh mushrooms, coarsely chopped
2 teaspoons sumac to taste (see notes below)
1 beef stock

Preparation

Put the dried mushrooms in a small bowl and pour the boiling water over them. Soak for about 20 minutes until softened. Drain and reserve the soaking liquid. Chop the mushrooms and set aside.

In a large, heavy pot, heat the sunflower oil over medium-high heat and brown the meat pieces in batches, seasoning with salt and juniper. Be careful not to crowd the pan. Cook each batch for about 10 to 15 minutes. Remove the browned meat to a platter.

Reduce the heat and add the onions, mushrooms, oregano and sumac, and sauté until the onion is soft and the mushrooms release some of their liquid, about 3 to 5 minutes. Stir in the chopped, reconstituted wild mushrooms and the soaking liquid and the stock, stirring to dislodge any brown bits that stick to the pan.

Return the meat to the pot, bring to a simmer and cook, partially covered, until the meat is fork tender, about 2 hours. Taste and adjust the seasonings. Remove from the heat and let sit a few minutes before serving.

Notes:

Juniper: The Indigenous pantry relies on the peppery astringent notes of juniper to do the work of pepper. It's easy to find in backyards and the edges of playing fields and parks. Fresh or dried, it's best crushed before adding. Note that the flavor is quite strong. If you can't find juniper, substitute black pepper.

Sumac: The lemony notes of staghorn sumac spark braised meats. Sumac is available in the spice aisles of many supermarkets, co-ops and specialty stores. If you can't find sumac, substitute lemon juice. □

Music moves

NOW PLAYING | Tom Irwin

Good day, to anyone and everyone, anywhere and everywhere. Here I offer to you some meanderings, musings, ponderings and wonderings about our local music scene.

First, condolences go to the family of Pat Tavine, as we commemorate a local bar owner, music booker, story-teller and all-around larger-than-life guy. We lost Pat on Aug. 19, and he left behind a legacy in our world as one who always supported musicians in his clubs. Venues with live music at their core that he ran included the old Lake Club, Lake Club II, On Broadway, The Spot and others, all stemming from his original business simply called Pat Tavine's, a neighborhood bar located at Chatham and Wabash that opened in 1970. Thanks, Pat, for all the music you kept going and for all the stories and good times associated with the company you kept and the bars you ran. RIP.

I've been waiting for way too long to talk about Dr. Swing, a forever friend of music in Springfield. Otherwise known as Bill Hickerson, this veteran of radio (and an excellent musician too) with an encyclopedic memory (remember those book things?) of jazz, big band, classical and many other genres of music, was last heard on the radio airwaves as a DJ on WQNA. Now you can catch him live and online at DrSwing.net, every Sunday morning (8 a.m.-noon), as well as his Happy Hour shows every Monday, Wednesday and Friday (4-6 p.m.). Get to listening and be sure to call in to say hello to Bill and make requests. And if you can keep up with his wild wit, quick quotes and bountiful banter, as only the good Doctor can deliver, maybe you'll get on the air, too.

Saturday is Sept. 11, a date forever locked into our national consciousness as 9/11. Lincoln Library, our municipal public library at Seventh and Capitol, commemorates the 20-year anniversary of that fateful day with a Saturday morning program called Lincoln Library Remembers: Never Forget, featuring a Reveal of Senbazuru at 10:30, Remembrance by Kathryn Harris at 10:40 and then an hour set of live music performance by me starting around 11. There will be an exhibit opening as well, "September 11, 2001: The Day That Changed the World," which runs until Sept. 18. The event is open to the public, so please plan to attend or in some way acknowledge the day in remembrance.

This Saturday from 12-10 p.m., our friends out at the Knights of Columbus Hall on Meadowbrook Road are back with another wild, wooly and wonderful Oktoberfest. Along with food (German and otherwise) and fun (all kinds for you to make), there, of course, will be live music brought to you by three authentic German bands. Break out the lederhosen as Die Musikmeisters (Chicago), Die Spietsbaum (St. Louis) and the Heidelberg German Band (Quincy) do the polka and such, throughout the day and into the "nacht" for your enjoyment.

Lincoln's New Salem State Historic Site hosts a Bluegrass Festival on Friday and Saturday evening in the Kelso Hollow outdoor theater, home of the Theater in the Park shows of years past (and future!) with bands from all over the Midwest playing bluegrass music. From 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Saturday, musicians play traditional music throughout the village on instruments such as mountain and hammer dulcimers, concertinas, bones, spoons, autoharps, fiddles, banjos, mandolins and guitars. As in years past, impromptu jamming is encouraged, so bring along your trad instrument to join in the music making.

Enjoy, be safe and check out the listings for all those other happenings going on. □

The real estate is improved with a single family residence.
The judgment amount was $58,141.00.

Sale terms: 25% down of the highest bid by certified funds at the close of the sale payable to The Judicial Sales Corporation. No third party checks will be accepted. The balance, including the Judicial Sale fee for the Abandoned Residential Property Municipality Relief Fund, which is calculated on residential real estate at the rate of $1 for each $1,000 or fraction thereof of the amount paid by the purchaser not to exceed $300, in certified funds/or wire transfer, is due within twenty-four (24) hours. No fee shall be paid by the mortgagee acquiring the residential real estate pursuant to its credit bid at the sale or by any mortgagee, judgment creditor, or other lienor acquiring the residential real estate whose rights in and to the residential real estate arose prior to the sale. The subject property is subject to general real estate taxes, special assessments, or special taxes levied against said real estate and is offered for sale without any representation as to quality or quantity of title and without recourse to Plaintiff and in "AS IS" condition. The sale is further subject to confirmation by the court.

Upon payment in full of the amount bid, the purchaser will receive a Certificate of Sale that will entitle the purchaser to a deed to the real estate after confirmation of the sale. The property will NOT be open for inspection and plaintiff makes no representation as to the condition of the property. Prospective bidders are admonished to check the court file to verify all information.

If this property is a condominium unit, the purchaser of the unit at the foreclosure sale, other than a mortgagee, shall pay the assessments and the legal fees required by The Condominium Property Act, 765 ILCS 605/9(g)(1) and (g)(4). If this property is a condominium unit which is part of a common interest community, the purchaser of the unit at the foreclosure sale other than a mortgagee shall pay the assessments required by The Condominium Property Act, 765 ILCS 605/18.5(g-1).

IF YOU ARE THE MORTGAGOR (HOMEOWNER), YOU HAVE THE RIGHT TO REMAIN IN POSSESSION FOR 30 DAYS AFTER ENTRY OF AN ORDER OF POSSESSION, IN ACCORDANCE WITH SECTION 15-1701(C) OF THE ILLINOIS MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE LAW.
