State's Attorney Dan Wright a candidate for judge

John Milhiser has returned to the Sangamon County State's Attorney's Office

COURTS | Dean Olsen

Sangamon County State's Attorney Dan Wright is among seven candidates vying to be appointed to an associate circuit judge vacancy created by the July 23 death of Matthew Mauer.

And former State's Attorney John Milhiser, Wright's former boss when Wright was an assistant state's attorney, is now working for Wright as an assistant state's attorney handling felony cases, according to county records.

Wright's name appeared in results of an advisory poll of lawyers in the 7th Judicial Circuit who were asked to evaluate all seven candidates on characteristics ranging from integrity and temperament to overall suitability for being a judge.

The results were released Sept. 29 on the website of the Illinois State Bar Association, which conducted the poll.

Milhiser, 53, returned to the State's Attorney's Office on July 10, and is being paid $75,000 per year as a part-time employee, according to county records.

Wright received approval from the Sangamon County Board's finance and court services committees in April to fill the vacant position that Milhiser was hired to fill.

Wright declined comment on his interest in the associate circuit judge position and Milhiser's hiring.

Milhiser told Illinois Times he agreed to return to the State's Attorney's Office after Wright approached him in the spring and asked whether he could "help out" with the prosecution of felony cases.

"I understand the important work that prosecutors do and the impact it can have on the community," Milhiser said. "I enjoy working with the victims and with law enforcement on these cases to make the community safer. ... I've used the role of a prosecutor as a problem-solver."

Milhiser said his work for the office has been just short of full-time.

Dan Wright

Mauer, 62, previously worked as an assistant state's attorney, then in private practice, and as a felony public defender before being appointed as an associate judge in 2013.

Mauer had been a quadriplegic since an accident at age 13 and was a graduate of Griffin High School, the former Sangamon State University and the University of Illinois College of Law.

The 7th Circuit's six circuit judges will vote on Mauer's replacement and are expected to announce their decision in the next few weeks, Ryan Cadagin, Sangamon County's presiding circuit judge, told Illinois Times. In addition to Sangamon, the circuit includes the counties of Greene, Jersey, Macoupin, Morgan and Scott.

When asked whether he would consider applying to be appointed state's attorney if Wright were chosen to be an associate judge, Milhiser said, "There's not an opening right now, but if there was an opening, I'd be interested."

Associate circuit judges are appointed to four-year terms, and there's no limit to the number of times they can be appointed.

Associate judges are paid $222,661 annually. Circuit judges are paid $234,380, and the Sangamon County's state's attorney is paid $197,436.

The voluntary ISBA poll was sent to all ISBA members who practice or reside in the circuit. Results of the poll aren't binding on the circuit judges in their decision to fill Mauer's position.

Wright's ratings were based on 144 responses, the highest number received for any of the seven candidates.

Though results were close in some categories, Wright placed sixth out of the six candidates who received ratings when it came to integrity, impartiality, temperament and sensitivity. He ranked third on legal ability and health, fourth on meeting the requirements of the office, and fifth on court management.

Wright has received the highest available peer rating from the legal profession's respected Martindale-Hubbell ratings company when it comes to ability and integrity.

The other candidates for associate judge are Andrew Affrunti, Rex Gradeless, Kateah McMasters, Lorelei Nickols, Abby Sgro and Ali Mikels. There were an insufficient number of respondents for Mikels' ratings to be valid, so they weren't listed, the ISBA said.

Milhiser was first hired as an assistant state's attorney in Sangamon County in 1997 and entered private practice in 2003. He returned to the office in 2008 as the first assistant state's attorney, or the office's second in command.

Milhiser, a Republican, was appointed state's attorney in 2010 when former State's Attorney John Schmidt, also a Republican, was appointed a circuit judge. Schmidt, who later became an appellate judge, died in 2017 at age 52.

Milhiser was elected state's attorney in 2012, defeating Democrat Ron Stradt, and was reelected in 2016 before being appointed U.S. attorney for the Central District of Illinois in 2018. His appointment by former President Donald Trump, a Republican, was affirmed by the U.S. Senate in January 2019.

Milhiser resigned in February 2021 after Joe Biden, a Democrat, defeated Trump in the November 2020 presidential election.

Milhiser ran in the GOP primary for Illinois secretary of state in June 2022, losing to former state Rep. Dan Brady, R-Bloomington, who later lost to former state Treasurer Alexi Giannoulias, a Democrat.

Since leaving the U.S. Attorney's Office, Milhiser said he taught government, history and English at Lawrence Education Center during the 2021-22 academic year, and he worked with other former U.S. attorneys and law-enforcement officials nationwide to start the nonprofit American Center for Law & Public Safety.

The center says on its website, taclps.com, that it is "dedicated to safeguarding the rule of law, civil liberties, and the Constitution," and that the group "strives to defend these principles against the radical and lawless progressive agenda taking precedence over the rule of law." Milhiser's wife, Gail Noll, is a Sangamon County circuit judge. To avoid a potential conflict of interest while her husband works for the State's Attorney's Office, Noll has recused herself from handling all future felony cases, and current felony cases on her docket have been reassigned to other judges, Cadagin said.

Wright, 44, a Republican, was a partner at the Springfield law firm of Brown, Hay & Stephens before joining the State's Attorney's Office as a felony assistant state's attorney in 2016. He was promoted to first assistant state's attorney in 2017 and was appointed state's attorney the next year, when Milhiser was appointed U.S. attorney.

Wright won a four-year term as state's attorney in 2020, defeating Democratic challenger Mike Drake by 18 percentage points.

Filing by candidates who want to run in the Republican and Democratic primaries for state's attorney begins Nov. 27 and continues through Dec. 4. The primary will be March 19, and the general election will be Nov. 5, 2024. □

Editor's note

In Springfield and Washington there is a code of honor among politicians. They must do what they say (to each other) they're going to do. Politicians may easily forget promises made to constituents, but they know they won't succeed in politics if they vote yes after they promised colleagues or leaders they'd vote no. Kevin McCarthy sounded like a nice guy when he said after his ouster he didn't regret "choosing governance over grievance" or negotiating for compromise. "I do not regret my efforts to build coalitions and find solutions," he said. So why didn't he win reelection as speaker? He can't be trusted. House members from the hardest right to the farthest left agreed on one thing: McCarthy doesn't keep his word.

Gail O'Neill reflects on her career in public health

John Ridley appointed acting director for Sangamon County Health Department

HEALTH | Dean Olsen

Gail O'Neill began her career at the Springfield Department of Public Health in 1986, first teaching 5- and 6-year-olds the importance of brushing their teeth, then later counseling people newly diagnosed with HIV.

She ended her career Sept. 29 as director of the Sangamon County Department of Public Health, which merged with the city department in 2006, after more than three years as a leader in the local response to the COVID-19 pandemic.

O'Neill, 66, became director in 2019, succeeding the retiring Jim Stone after being his assistant director since the merger. She has helped the community deal with many health challenges, but she knows she may be most remembered for her calm face and steady voice as she dispensed advice to the public through the news media on how to protect themselves from COVID-19 and reduce its spread.

The loss of life related to coronavirus in Sangamon County was devastating, and COVID-19 mitigations she supported caused some hard feelings in the business community, she said.

Some people questioned advice that changed during the pandemic about masking and other precautions as doctors learned more about the virus even though such discoveries are part of the scientific process, she said.

Some people also were resistant to vaccine recommendations and mandates in a politically charged environment statewide and nationally, she said.

But O'Neill said she will remember her career in public health fondly, even the time since COVID-19 hit Springfield in March 2020.

"I've learned so much over the years and worked with some awesome people," she said.

The once-in-a-generation pandemic killed more than 450 Sangamon County residents and more than 40,400 people across Illinois. The state's COVID-19 death rate was lower than in adjacent states except for Wisconsin, according to federal health data.

When asked whether she became depressed during the pandemic's worst months, O'Neill said, "a little bit," but she focused on the teamwork she enjoyed both within the health care field and as part of Sangamon County's "incident command center" of medical, governmental and nonprofit officials that guided the response.

"I had wanted this job, and there were the rest of us here, all working together, and at the end of the day, it felt like we had done some good," she said.

O'Neill raved about the dedication of her 105-member staff – both before and during the pandemic – saying everyone's actions undoubtedly saved lives and helped avoid Springfield hospitals becoming overwhelmed.

"I need to remind the staff of that, because we did have a lot of turnover during that time period," she said.

Two-thirds of the staff left and eventually was replaced after stress and changing personal priorities led to many resignations, she said.

O'Neill said she appreciated the support from county government when it provided up-front money, to be reimbursed later by federal pandemic relief funds, so the health department could hire additional nurses, contact tracers and fund other pandemic-response efforts.

The county health department became the supervising agency when a COVID-19 mass vaccination site was opened at the Illinois State Fairgrounds and operated with help from Illinois National Guard troops.

Health directors in some other Illinois counties lacked such support because of less cash flow and politics that discouraged some county boards from diverting resources to deal with what some citizens viewed as an overhyped epidemic or a liberal hoax, she said.

O'Neill, who was born in Atlanta, Georgia, and grew up in Peoria, the daughter of a Caterpillar Inc. manager, earned an annual salary of $135,705 as director and supervised a county-operated department with an annual budget of $10 million.

She has a bachelor's degree in health education from Western Illinois University, is married and has two sons, one stepson and six grandchildren.

The health department provides free and low-cost immunizations, counsels low-income parents, administers the Women, Infants and Children program, tracks and treats many communicable diseases, inspects restaurants and sewer systems, and runs the county animal control center, among other duties.

The department also serves as a satellite site for a primary care clinic operated by Southern Illinois University School of Medicine, and it operates the Menard County Department of Public Health as part of a contract with Menard County Government.

About $1.7 million of the health department's budget comes from property taxes. Most of the rest comes from state and federal grants and revenue from fees, fines and forfeitures.

A committee made up of Sangamon County Board and Sangamon County Board of Health members has nominated John Ridley, most recently a system administrator at Memorial Health, to be the next director of the health department.

Ridley, 59, who began his health care career in 1994 as a radiation therapist at Springfield Memorial Hospital, led multiple specialty clinics and post-acute care services across the system, according to a news release.

The Springfield native previously was chief operating officer at Decatur Memorial Hospital. He served six years of active duty in the U.S. Navy and earned a bachelor's degree in health administration from the University of Illinois Springfield and a master's in health care delivery science from Dartmouth College.

Ridley assumed the role of acting director on Oct. 2, and his appointment for the permanent position will be considered by the boards later in October.

"I have full faith that the department will have an effective leader that employees can rely on," O'Neill said.

Ridley will be paid $150,000 per year, a county spokesperson said. When asked why Ridley will be paid more than O'Neill, County Administrator Brian McFadden, through a spokesperson, said the difference resulted from a "review of comparable counties, competing market forces and the difference in education."

O'Neill's memories from her time at the city and county health departments included mass immunizations for bacterial meningitis in 1994, a leptospirosis outbreak in 1998 associated with a triathlon at Lake Springfield, efforts to guard against terrorism after the World Trade Center terrorist attack in 2001, high demand for H1N1 flu vaccine in 2009, the move to a new headquarters on Springfield's east side at 2833 South Grand Ave. E. in 2010 and the formation of a communitywide opioid task force in 2017.

County Board Chairman Andy Van Meter said O'Neill's "entire career has been a series of superlatives." She was the "answer woman" during the pandemic, he said. □

Driving test age increasing to 79

Older drivers involved in fewer crashes than younger drivers

DRIVING | Andrew Adams, Capitol News Illinois

Illinois Secretary of State Alexi Giannoulias last week filed administrative rules that would increase the age at which a driver is required to pass a driving test when they renew their license, raising it from 75 to 79.

The rules – proposed by Giannoulias to the legislative Joint Committee on Administrative Rules – would keep in place a state policy that went into effect during the COVID-19 pandemic.

During the pandemic, lawmakers in Springfield temporarily modified several requirements for driver’s licenses to ease strain on the secretary of state’s office, which oversees driver services facilities. That included the age increase for required driver tests.

But that policy was scheduled to expire Oct. 1, so Giannoulias’ office filed emergency rules to extend it beyond that date, along with identical permanent rules. That rulemaking committee’s next regular meeting is planned for Oct. 17 in Chicago, at which point it can determine whether to leave the rules in place, request changes or file an objection.

“This change would make Illinois driving standards for senior drivers more consistent compared to other states while keeping Illinois as one of the strictest states for license renewals,” Giannoulias said in a news release.

Under the pandemic-era policy and the rules proposed by Giannoulias, all drivers aged 78 and younger must renew their licenses every four years. At age 79, drivers must complete a driving test as part of that process.

State policies for those aged 79 and older would not change under Giannoulias’ proposed rules. Drivers aged 81 to 86 must renew their license and take a vision and driving test every two years, and drivers aged 87 and older must renew their license and take those tests every year.

Illinois is the only state in the country that has a driving test requirement for people over a certain age. Illinois also requires more frequent driver’s license renewals for people over age 80, something only 23 states require.

The change will affect approximately 3 percent of Illinois’ driving population, according to the secretary of state’s office.

As part of the temporary change, the secretary of state’s office issued a report on driving safety among older drivers, which found that drivers aged 75 years and older were involved in fewer crashes – even after the temporary rule change went into effect – than those aged 16 to 69 years.

“When it comes to total crashes, individuals who are aged 75 and older consistently experienced lower crash rates compared to nearly every other age group,” according to the report.

Age-related requirements for drivers have been a longtime issue for AARP Illinois, an advocacy group that represents the interests of those over age 50.

“Age alone is not determinative of driving performance” Ryan Gruenfelder, outreach and advocacy manager at AARP Illinois, told Capitol News Illinois.

Gruenfelder said AARP receives complaints about age-related requirements for drivers, noting they make competent drivers feel “targeted” for their age. He said the organization will continue to work with the secretary of state’s office and advocate for using a person’s mobility or indicators of driving behavior to trigger possible driving test requirements, regardless of age.

But Gruenfelder said AARP commends Giannoulias for his recommendation. The group also approves of Giannoulias’ September action to move the state’s busiest driver services facilities to an appointment-based model, as well as this week’s announcement that two new facilities targeted to senior drivers will offer walk-in services. □

Drivers tend to get into fewer accidents as they age

For every 1,000 drivers over age 75, fewer than 25 are involved in crashes each year. Young adult drivers between ages 20 and 24 are involved in more than three times as many accidents.

Sheriff Jack Campbell, standing in front of an enclosed day room for inmates at the Sangamon County Jail, says he worries the end of cash bail in Illinois will result in higher crime rates. For most of the jail's inmates, he said: "When they are not locked up, they commit crimes. This is what they do for a living."

We welcome letters. Please include your full name, address and telephone number. We edit all letters. Send them to editor@illinoistimes.com.

MOST OPPOSED

Remember, out of 102 state's attorneys throughout Illinois, 100 opposed the SAFE-T Act ("Cash bail comes to an end," Sept. 21). I wonder what they know that the public doesn't?

Michell Neville
Via Facebook.com/illinoistimes

MORE COSTS

The argument is that we're paying to keep people in jail over minor charges. But aren't we also paying when they steal from retailers that are then forced to raise prices to offset the cost of the thieves? And also paying officers that have to go hunt them down when they don't show up after getting a notice to appear? Seems like we're paying twice as much now.

Chris Cantrall

SAME CAPACITY

The Sangamon County Jail had 300 inmates on Sept. 21, roughly the same number it had the week before. Which, by the way, is more humans than it's rated to hold.

EXCITING PROJECT

What an exciting time for the Springfield community ("Groundbreaking for Scheels Sports Park," Sept. 28). Hopefully this excitement will come to fruition in 2025 with a ribbon cutting and not hit any problems to derail the completion of the sports complex.

It is nice to see all the government entities, new and old, getting behind this. The former mayor put in a lot of hard work and heavy lifting to get the city council to approve this project. I'm glad to see that he was quoted in the article. He truly is a person, like others, who wants to see the city flourish and does not care who gets the credit – although he should take a lot of credit for this project getting to where it is today.

James Patton

ASK QUESTIONS

What people need to be asking is: What does this sports park produce, how many full-time jobs will be created, and will employees get a full health care benefit package? Springfield can no longer survive on tourism. The town is dying and people are fleeing for greener pastures.

Greg Zoll

NO NEGATIVITY
I'm tired of the lifelong

Springfieldians chiming in and saying, "This town will always be a dump." Can we please try to do better? I go to Peoria and Bloomington quite often, and they have great parks and people like living there. What's so different about Springfield?

Grampa fulfills the Sabbath

My grandfather, brought up in a strictly religious family, decided to dedicate his life to following God's laws. He became a minister. But then he went deaf; felt he couldn't continue to serve well his congregation, so what to do? He decided to produce clean milk: sorely needed in 1900 – but what about that fourth commandment? A cow did not observe a day of rest out of seven but produced an udder full every day! Grampa solved this dilemma by giving each hired man (including self and Gramma) two half-days off each week. This totaled a full day off for everybody. Grampa figured God wasn't counting days but hours, and not really thinking about cows. Thus, that fourth commandment was fulfilled!

Illinois GOP questions Chinese ownership of new manufacturing plant

POLITICS | Rich Miller

The Illinois Senate Republicans are amplifying complaints made earlier by the Illinois Republican Party and others about a massive economic development project in Manteno.

The ILGOP complained in a recent fundraising email about the “encroachment” of the Chinese Communist Party’s influence on the economy, then connected Gotion, Inc. to the CCP. Gotion’s American subsidiary is building a massive, $2 billion electric vehicle battery plant in Kankakee County with big help from state and local governments.

Elements of the far right, including former state Rep. Jeanne Ives and various newsletters and social media forums have essentially claimed that the communists are using taxpayer funds to build some sort of spy base, or use it to promote CCP activities, or something. It’s not totally clear what. The state GOP claimed the plant would be built “right next to a military base,” which isn’t true, unless you count National Guard and Army Reserve camps in that category.

Anyway, the Senate Republicans expressed their own concerns in what was supposed to be a private letter to Gov. JB Pritzker last week, which I obtained. Gotion is based in California, but its parent company was founded in China and has standard language in its Chinese charter about how it will “carry out Party activities in accordance with the Constitution of the Communist Party of China.”

“During your conversations with Gotion Inc.,” the SGOPs asked the governor, “were there any discussions concerning whether the company will continue to ‘ensure necessary conditions for carrying out Party activities’ while in Illinois?”

Man, what I wouldn’t give to see Chinese commies try to organize a cell in Manteno. That would be a hoot.

Look, the Chinese are already here. Several Chinese companies invest in Illinois and several Illinois companies do business in China. The computer used to create that letter was probably made in China or has lots of Chinese components.

More importantly, Illinois Manufacturers Association CEO Mark Denzler pointed out to me when I called that a federal process exists to assess security risks for companies like Gotion and, he said, that process will play itself out here as well. Denzler, a lifelong Republican, doesn’t seem to have any major concerns and was at the project’s Manteno unveiling. Gotion was already given a federal green light in Michigan.

The US Departments of Defense, Justice and State have not expressed any qualms about the project that anyone knows of. The company is required to invest $2 billion and create at least 2,600 good-paying jobs. Gotion is using American workers to build a product with lots of American-made components for American-made automobiles. Yeah, it’s the Chinese government. They have to be watched, for sure. But that’s not the state’s responsibility. That’s on the federal government.

And the Senate Republicans’ questions about whether the plant’s workers will be union members or whether there are any safeguards for workers’ rights have some legitimacy, particularly since a majority of the caucus voted for the union-backed Workers’ Rights Amendment.

Manteno is about 15 miles from the Indiana border. If Gotion had opened its massive new plant in Hoosierville, the Republicans would’ve undoubtedly pounced on the governor’s failure.

Manteno is represented in the House by a Republican, Rep. Jackie Haas, who supports the project. The state party and Senate Republican attacks are not sitting well with the House Republicans, but they’ve had to remain mostly silent.

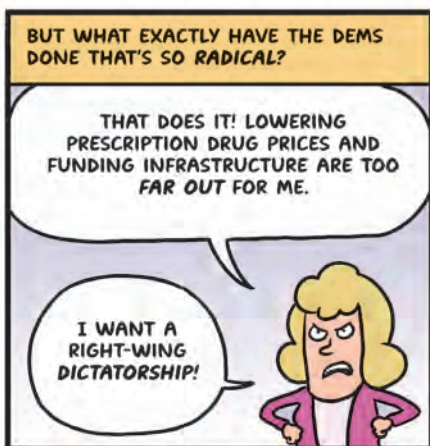

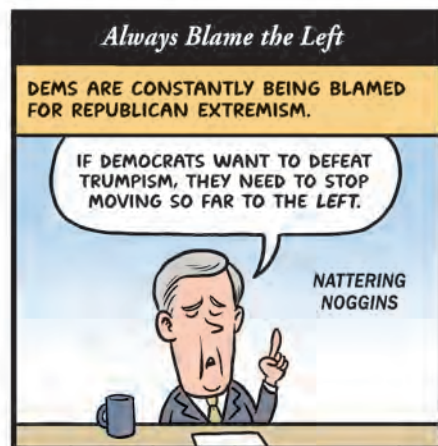

The governor has put an enormous amount of time and effort into getting this deal done. Illinois has a bad reputation among business types. Overcoming those reputational hurdles ain’t easy, which is why Pritzker has had to work so hard to achieve this goal.

Pritzker also believes that closing this deal will convince other companies to follow along. So, he’s not about to sit back while people dump on this accomplishment.

The letter Pritzker sent back to the Senate Republicans was brutal, accusing them of “doubling down on your own irrelevance.”

“Opposing 2,600 jobs and $2 billion dollars in investment for a community that needs it is a curious position, but I have long since stopped trying to understand what the Illinois Republican Party has become,” he wrote.

The Republicans replied that they were simply asking some questions and would still like them answered. Then again, a cynic could point to the fact that Democratic Sen. Patrick Joyce is up for reelection next year. The Manteno plant is in his district, and he is an enthusiastic supporter. □

A solar farm for Springfield

Now's the time

GUESTWORK | Bob Croteau

In a study of electrical supply options for Springfield in the 1990s, a second gas turbine at the Dallman power station was the favored option. Although the fuel was expensive compared to coal, it was relatively inexpensive to build compared to a coal plant. However, another option presented was a solar farm, which showed it was more cost-effective than the cheaper gas plant over 20 years, at an installed cost of $5/watt. Ultimately the coal plant won, due to the promise of more construction jobs and more permanent jobs for operation and maintenance.

What was missed was that solar also generates jobs. Now we are faced with the aftermath of that decision. The City Council just voted to approve a study for the conversion of the Dalman 4 coal plant to natural gas, with plans to use it long enough to pay for itself by 2040.

Solar farms now cost under $1/watt and $3/watt with storage. You can build one as fast or as gradually as you need it. You can also avoid the feast and famine brought on when a large labor force is needed to build a conventional plant, then laid off when it's done. A solar farm can grow a labor force and retain it as more and more arrays are installed to match growth.

Renewables are "predictive resources," as all you need to do is watch the weather forecast to know if solar or wind power is going to be available. Then you can substitute them for your fossil fuel sources. The sun drives summer peak demand from air-conditioning loads, but it can also be the source to address that demand. Tracking solar arrays rotate throughout the day, tracking the sun as it moves across the sky, meeting its full availability. Wind can typically meet winter nighttime heating loads and be available to charge electric cars overnight.

There is much talk about new gas and converted coal plants being the go-to options for capacity. But what happens to our home heating costs as the electricity-generating industry converts to gas? The nuclear industry will say they are the go-to option for shortfalls in capacity because they are carbon-free, including "new" nuclear. In fact, nuclear plants are the most expensive option and the slowest to bring online – unless we want to throw away all the safety controls. Nuclear plants are also the most dangerous option, and there is still no safe storage for nuclear waste, which includes mining and milling dust, which is radioactive for hundreds of thousands of years.

What do you do when the sun doesn't shine and the wind doesn't blow? Utility-scale batteries are here. Detractors say batteries can't do the job because they only last four hours, but that is all the time you need for those critical peak demand periods.

Springfield, Missouri, built a five-megawatt solar farm with battery backup. California has 5,600 megawatts of storage capacity. With possibly the world's largest supply of lithium recently discovered in Nevada and Oregon, scarcity is not a problem. Advanced batteries include Iron-Air batteries and Iron-Flow batteries. Even water can be separated into hydrogen and oxygen using renewables and then recombined in fuel cells to produce electricity and water again in a closed loop.

To get a new perspective on the future, we can see an emerging electrical grid that is widely distributed, with solar, wind and batteries of all sizes from household-scale to utility-scale. It will all be held together as a "Smart Grid," where time-of-use meters will allow for feeding electricity to and from the grid when demand and price align.

Reliability will be greatly increased as homes can run on their own batteries during disruptions or help support the grid if needed.

Hindsight is always 20/20 and, in this case, unfortunately, the coal plant is a stranded asset that we still need to pay off. Assuming conversion to gas is cleaner, with less global-warming CO2 emissions, and is more efficient, would utility engineers want to just stop there and not install solar? Hopefully this new engineering study that answers these questions will be transparent and shared with the public. Transparency would help us make responsible community-based decisions that affect us all.

This is a climate emergency. The planet can't wait. Let's aggressively reduce emissions now through more conservation and by installing solar on rooftops, over parking lots, at our substations and by building a big solar farm on the land we already have for an unneeded second lake.

We are public power, and we have a say in what happens here. We won't need fossil fuel or nuclear anymore. We can instead rely on the sun, the only safe nuclear plant, sited 93 million miles away, that will last another 4.5 billion years. □

Bob Croteau of Springfield has been promoting solar and energy conservation since he was training unemployed youth to do weatherization and build solar collectors in 1980. He joined the CWLP Energy Services Office in 1984 as an energy auditor and engineered Springfield's first solar electric array installed on the FSR Homeless Shelter in 1989. He developed the solar Interconnection and Net Metering policies and Solar Rebate program. His master's project in environmental studies from University of Illinois Springfield was a feasibility study for a solar power plant for CWLP.

Reconstructing Springfield's high schools

Secondary education in Springfield is undergoing a metamorphosis as hundreds of millions of dollars are being pumped into revitalizing the city's three public high schools.

Perhaps no project better illustrates this transformation than Lanphier High School, which is undergoing a $93 million facilities upgrade that will largely be complete by January.

The 86-year-old building is becoming state-of-the-art with new classroom space, two new gyms, a new commons and cafeteria space, auditorium and music classrooms. A modern exterior will also be added to the building along with more parking space.

"We're doing this for the next 100 years," said Jennifer Gill, superintendent of Springfield Public Schools District 186. "Every school district has the responsibility to keep their buildings in tip-top shape and provide a great education for their students."

Gill said funding for the improvements at Lanphier, as well as the planned improvements at Springfield High and Southeast High schools, comes through a one-cent sales tax approved by voters in 2018.

Before the most recent renovations, Lanphier was not compliant with the Americans with Disabilities Act, she said.

Even the desks are getting a makeover at Lanphier. These desks are designed to fit together in clusters so students can work more easily on group projects. They also are more accommodating for various body types than traditional student desks. PHOTO BY JOSH CATALANO

“One of the biggest and most primary drivers for comprehensively reconstructing Lanphier was ADA. They did not previously have an elevator,” Gill said. “The building had been phased in over time, adding additions, and all of those had different elevations with stairs going up and stairs going down. So, any student or teacher who might have a disability was not able to move around the building with ease or get to all portions of the building.”

It’s no longer your grandparents’ high school. Lockers are shorter and more accessible to youngsters in wheelchairs. Private, all-gender restrooms have been added at a time when more students are expressing gender fluidity.

“We want to be compliant with the law regarding restrooms and different genders,” Assistant Principal Alicia Miller said as she stood beside the door of an all-gender restroom. “There is one person in at a time, and they can lock it. This allows students to be who they are and feel confident.”

The new classrooms are larger and more technologically sophisticated, giving teachers greater flexibility in how they instruct.

One of them is biology teacher Rob Handy. “We have projectible microscopes that enable students to see the same thing at once,” he said, as he pointed at a large computer monitor at the front of his classroom, where a blackboard might have been generations ago.

“Look! Here are some algae – some little green critters that do photosynthesis,” Handy said as an image appeared on the screen as his three pupils looked on.

He pressed a button and a new image appeared. “This little one is a diatom critter. Last week, we started to introduce cells to the kids.”

Handy added the changes are more than just technological. For example, larger classrooms with more counter space and electrical outlets enable him to create and exhibit habitats for students to learn more about plants and animals.

“We’re getting poison dart frogs,” Handy said. “They’re going to send us three tadpoles, and my three classes are going to raise each of the tadpoles up into real frogs. And then we’ll have a vivarium for them. It’s a living ecosystem. So, it’ll have all the plants, including the little bugs that the frogs eat. It’s self-sustainable. It will enable me to teach them things that they would not normally get to see.”

Even the desks and seating in the newer classrooms provide pupils with a different learning experience.

No longer are the desktops connected to the chairs. Instead, they are individual tables, which allows students to adjust how far they are from the desktop.

“We all have different body styles, and it’s just more comfortable for all students," Miller said.

Laura Allen, another biology teacher, added, "These desks can be moved so students can collaborate a lot better and have flexible labs."

Allen pointed at the large classroom windows and said, "We have lots of light so we can do photosynthesis stuff. I also can have an aquarium now. I can do all kinds of things (with these new classrooms) that I've never been able to do."

Expanding the vocational program is also in the works.

"Lanphier will become the high school where students from across Springfield can attend to learn more about building trades," said Mike Grossen, Springfield Public Schools director of school leadership and facilities planning.

Standing before the high school's cafeteria, Grossen pointed and said, "We'll have two classrooms in there and also a building trades lab. It's being currently used as a common space and their cafeteria. They'll start (construction of) that in the summer."

Miller noted that just as Southeast High School is now the hub for students throughout District 186 to train for health care professions, the plan is for Lanphier to serve as a district-wide hub for those wanting to pursue training in the building trades.

Grossen said the building trades section and the planned auditorium will be the last parts of the construction project to be completed, with the auditorium schedule to open in fall 2024. Unlike the city's two other public high schools, Lanphier has never had an auditorium.

"They never had one, but now they will have an auditorium with an orchestra pit," he said. "It's going to be pretty outstanding. ... I believe they have used a gym and they had a stage there. ... They also sometimes went to different areas. I think they have used The Muni or other theaters to put on shows."

Later this year, an esports arena will be completed at Lanphier where teams can compete playing video games against other schools.

"We've got the first-ever high school esports arena being built here," said Dalton McGhiey, a science teacher who also serves as the head coach for the esports team. "With all the high schools that have been built since esports has taken off, we're the first one that I'm aware of in the country to be willing to invest this much money in our kids for esports. And we're not just converting a computer lab. We're building a high school esports arena."

McGhiey said the esports arena is scheduled to be complete in December. "It's my best Christmas present that I've ever received. (The school district asked) 'What do you want it to be?' And the district checked every box. It's going to be awesome," he said.

The football team received a gift of its own when renovations to Memorial Stadium were completed in August. Although the stadium is on the Lanphier campus, it serves athletes playing for both Lanphier and Springfield High Schools.

Renovations to the stadium took nearly five years and cost more than $6 million. The improvements include new field turf, a track, restroom facilities, a press box, team rooms and an away team concession area.

Also, part of the construction plans at Lanphier include demolition of the existing gym and construction of both a new gym and the creation of a new auxiliary gym, slated to be completed in January. The auxiliary gym is designed to host wrestling events, classes and basketball practices alongside the main gym.

The new gym will also serve as a storm shelter, which is a requirement under state law when buildings are constructed or renovated.

District 186 school board member Sarah Blissett represents Sub-District 3, which includes Lanphier High School. She said she is very excited to see the changes underway on the campus.

"There's not another high school in the state of Illinois that will have a brand-new esports lab like these kids are getting. The competition gym is going to be amazing," Blissett said.

"It's incredible when you combine the Lanphier renovations with Memorial Stadium, which is gorgeous. And the Lucky Horseshoes are looking to do a lot of stuff over at Robin Roberts Stadium. And we have the new (high-speed) rail that's coming. In five years, nobody's going to recognize that side of town anymore." □

Springfield High School, built in 1916, is next up among the city's high schools for a major makeover.

Springfield High next on the list

Soon, Springfield High School will undergo a renovation every bit as large as the $93 million one currently underway at Lanphier, Superintendent Jennifer Gill told Illinois Times recently.

"We're really at the 50% mark of the conceptual design," she said. "We'll be looking to finish those designs and go out for bid and start the project later this spring."

Already, Springfield Public Schools has purchased additional land near the SHS campus. But an exact price tag for the project has yet to be determined.

"We really don't know exactly what number we're going to land on," Gill said. "But it'll be around $93 million to $95 million, if not closer to $100 million dollars, in the end. But that will be phased in over several years of construction."

The first stage of construction will include new gym space.

"We have acquired most of the property on Monroe Street that is adjacent to the building so that we can utilize that space to build out and off the building," Gill said. "We'll incorporate a new gymnasium that will be similar in scope to Lanphier's new gym. We will also have what we call a second gym." Gill said that space will also double as the storm shelter, which is a requirement for any newly constructed building or addition.

Two wings of the high school that once housed its shop classes, but now host weightlifting and the school's wrestling program, will be demolished, she said.

"On the other side, the music section, we'll be adding on to the building to provide extra classroom space," Gill said. "Much like Lanphier, it'll be remodeled and have more bright lights, new hallway space, new tiling, new ceilings. It's all very important to Springfield High."

She added that it is vital that each of the district's high school campuses be treated equitably.

"For instance, Lanphier had no auditorium, so that was a big piece (of the project there). Southeast's auditorium was 100% gutted and renovated this past summer. And it's fully operational now at Southeast High School, and it's beautiful," said Gill.

Southeast, which is the newest of the city's public high schools, also had a full renovation of its restrooms and will soon have its football field and track stadium renovated, Gill said.

Gill said the district does not yet have a cost projection for the Southeast High School improvements.

"It's still in the pre-planning phases, and we have not gone out for bond on that project yet," she said.

The debate over “natural” wine

Purists miss the important question: Is it made with integrity?

FOOD | Ashley Meyer

Curious wine lovers have likely noticed a new category emerging in recent years. “Natural” wines have been popping up on wine lists and in boutique wine shops throughout the country. And while the current trend can be traced back to the early 1980s, natural winemaking has existed for centuries. If you’re lucky enough to have enjoyed a Grand Cru Burgundy or a powerful Barolo, you’re likely to have drunk a natural wine. “Worldwide, all wines were natural up until the second world war, after which many winemakers industrialized the process to increase production,” explained Eduard Seitan, a Chicago-based sommelier and partner with the One-Off Hospitality group. “I began to hear the term ‘natural wine’ occasionally starting about 10 years ago, and at that time it was such a weird, avant garde thing, but in Chicago the trend really started to get big about six or seven years ago.”

Despite the popularity today of so-called natural wines, the category has largely defied definition. James Beard Award-winning wine writer Alice Feiring writes in her book Natural Wine for the People that natural wine starts with organically farmed grapes, “...then once the grapes are harvested and you start the winemaking process, you don’t add anything foreign or remove anything from the wine, nor do you shape it with machines.” Feiring adds that there might be some wiggle room for the addition of sulfur, which acts as an antioxidant, but ideally nothing is added to the grapes that was not created in the vineyard. That all sounds good, but what does it mean for the wine novice or seasoned wine lover looking for something interesting and delicious to drink with dinner?

To understand the natural wine movement, we need to examine its genesis. Stephen James is the director of education for Uva Imports, an Atlanta-based company that focuses on independent producers with an emphasis on sustainability. According to James, the story of natural wine as we think of it today is analogous to the history of punk rock. “The punk rock scene in the early 1970s changed the way people think. ... Bands like the Velvet Underground and The Stooges propelled the genre forward and created this sound that became punk. ... It was a reaction against arena rock, the status quo of what rock had become, essentially a caricature of itself.”

That’s just what the natural wine conversation is doing today, James explained. “It’s helping people better understand what’s happening in the wine world. ... There are lots of nasty chemicals being used, lots of manipulation. Much of what’s on the market today has been chemically designed to taste good. [Mass-production wineries] have researched what the average palate enjoys, and they add sugar, add or remove acid or tannins, to create a generic product that’s tasty but very forgettable.”

Many are surprised to learn that there are over 70 additives that are approved for use in wine, including sulfur – which has been an important component in winemaking for centuries – to newer additives like Mega Purple, a super-sweet concentrate that’s used to improve color in red wines. There are a wide array of techniques that winemakers can use to ensure that the bottle of chardonnay they produced this season tastes exactly like the chardonnay they made five years ago. The quality of consistency is more valued than consistent quality, with the consequence that many wines available today are devoid of character, sense of place, integrity or interest.

So the natural wine movement was born, but not without controversy. “For better or worse,” said James, “there’s been a big backlash in the wine community generally over natural wine. For Americans especially, it has become very binary, you’re either natural or you’re not, and this takes away the nuance of what it means to be human and what it means to make wine in this complex world.” This dogmatic approach, that all winemaking interventions are bad and only wines produced with spontaneous fermentations and zero added sulfur are ‘natural,’ has resulted in considerable confusion for the customer and consternation for wine sellers. Imagine going to a restaurant that refuses to wash salad greens because that would remove the essence of the soil from the salad. Does that make the salad more natural, or is it just dirty?

“To me, a lot of true natural wines made with zero intervention and zero sulfur added are not refreshing or terroir-driven anymore,” said James. “When you have an overwhelming funk that overrides any sense of place, it’s a flaw because it’s out of balance.”

While it is possible to make balanced, terroir-driven wines with zero added inputs, it’s time-consuming and labor intensive. “You can make a wine with great clarity that’s completely unfiltered and unfiltered if you have the patience to let it rest and settle naturally,” James explained. “For example, our producers in Barolo rack the sediment off over time to clarify their wines. A lot of these natural winemakers are rushing the process to achieve an aesthetic and the mousy aromas that you get in some natural wines comes from the fact that they’re not allowing the wine to go through the whole process slowly. The effervescence that’s sometimes associated with natural wines is a consequence of part of the fermentation finishing in the bottle, which makes the wine very unstable. As a result, many people have gotten burned with natural wines that are undrinkable and many professionals are increasingly skeptical.

“A lot of wine geeks really love that funk and mousy aroma in their wine, but these days I’m tasting more nice, gentle natural wines, what I would call natural wine 101,” said Seitan. “Wines that are pretty and drinkable and don’t hit you over the head with stink, but there’s still an interesting level of funk and unique character.”

So, as much as it has become fashionable to define natural wine by the lack of any artificial manipulation, the reality is that winemaking essentially influences the way the grape grows and ferments in a controlled environment. The degree of control falls on a large spectrum. “Where the line is drawn can be fairly arbitrary,” said James. “I think a better definition of what makes a wine natural is that it’s made with integrity and honesty, and are they being transparent about what they do with that wine? Up to this point natural wine has been about what’s not added to the wine. Now the conversation is shifting to how can we create a sustainable ecosystem, improve biodiversity for the future and create a system that’s sustainable? This is true whether we’re talking about workers’ rights, carbon footprint or growing cover crops in vineyards.” □

Ashley Meyer studied winemaking at Lincoln University in Christchurch, New Zealand, and recently achieved the Level III award from the Wine and Spirits Educational Trust. She founded and successfully operated RealCuisine Catering for five years, then turned her focus to motherhood and homesteading. These days, when she’s not cooking, gardening, parenting or writing, you can find Ashley at It’s All About Wine, offering insightful recommendations and mouthwatering pours.

MUSIC

Music in the garden, on the shores and at the Hoogland

NOW PLAYING | Tom Irwin

Welcome to our first full weekend of October as we find ourselves in the midst of fall flings, autumnal outings, Oktoberfest-erings and all such things that happen as we finish out the year of outdoor festivals and begin to consider the approaching cooler weather. So let's get out while we can and enjoy all the live music under the sun while it's fun and feasible.

For one of the last outdoor festivals of the year, head to Lincoln Memorial Garden this weekend for the storied Fall Harvest Festival. The formation of the place itself is an incredible story (check out the LMG history tent while you're there), but for now and for our music column limitations, let's stick with who's "now playing" at the upcoming fest. Along with all the crafts and food for perusal and purchase, there's always plenty of fun stuff for kids of all ages to do, finely complimenting live music performances at the stage area in a natural setting across the road from the nature center and garden grounds. This weekend's lineup includes Tater Tots Rock (9:45 a.m.), Stuart Smith (11 a.m.), Micah Walk and Dave Littrell (12:45 p.m.), then Rhodes & Battles Trio (2:30 p.m.) on Saturday with Ben Bedford (11 a.m.), Irwin & Son (12:45 p.m.) and Kraig Kenning (2:30 p.m.) scheduled for Sunday, all accompanied by a fine weather forecast for the entire time.

We stopped by Sheedy Shores WineGarden last Sunday to catch a super set of songs by Beige Desperadoes and the finely played music watched by a full crowd was a definite reminder of how much this venue will be missed next season. With the decision made to not be open every weekend in 2024 (hopefully for some special events), each visit is bittersweet this fall. The coming weekends will feature a few more acts than just on Sundays, so I thought I'd list what's up so folks could make an effort to see this neat spot out past Loami while possible.

This weekend is filled with good talent, including the dynamic duo of Tom & Geoff on Friday night, Brandon Elliott solo blues and more on Saturday evening. Then on Sunday afternoon it's Southern Illinois singer-songwriter Tim Crosby. Next weekend (Oct. 14-15) features the one-and-only Johnnie Owens (with a band!) on Saturday and the Nashville-based Gabe Marshall teamed with Dakota Leigh on Sunday. The good fun continues the next weekend (Oct. 20-22) with Tracy Gibbs on Friday, War Road Gypsy on Saturday and Tim Duggan on Sunday. Then comes the final show hosted by your friend and mine, Joel Honey, on Sunday, Oct. 29. Thanks for all of the great music support throughout the years. If Sheedy Shores has shows again, we will be very happy to see it happen.

This Thursday at the Hoogland Center for the Arts, you have a to catch a world-class, world-famous and world-performing jazz drummer when Steve Davis takes the Club Room stage. Joined by guitarist Jose Gobbo and bassist Andrew Binder, Davis brings four decades of phenomenal drumming experience, including teaching at prestigious colleges, extensive touring of Europe and North America, performances with David Liebman, Bill Evans and Lynne Arriale (and many more), plus playing on more than 200 recordings (including 12 of his own), along with engineering 300-some studio sessions of others and producing YouTube instructional videos for jazz drums. Yeah, he's the real deal, as they say, and all yours to experience and enjoy.

Off we go until next week. Please check the listings for more great music around town. □
